Mid-sidewalk hydrant called 'design error'

BOOTH STREET

Pedestrian oversight 'very encouraging,' councillor says

Emma Jackson
Metro | Ottawa

Poor Booth Street.

The brand new bridge over the city's flagship light-rail project is set to open Sunday, but on Thursday it was sagging under the weight of another planning gaffe — this time at the expense of pedestrians.

Photos of a yellow fire hydrant marooned in the middle of the bridge's brand new sidewalk — right in the path of pedestrians, people in wheelchairs and anyone with a stroller — made the rounds on Twitter Wednesday.

When Somerset Coun. Catherine McKenney first saw the photo, all she could do was gasp.

Neighbouring Kitchissippi Coun. Jeff Leiper was also rendered speechless — well, almost. "What can you say?" Leiper shrugged. "It's gobsmacking."

Thankfully, it's also fixable, said transportation committee chairman Coun. Keith Egli.

He said it was a "design error" on the part of Rideau Transit Group, which is responsible for building the light-rail project. Since it was their fault, they'll be picking up the tab, Egli said.

Staff in the city's light-rail office assured him the hydrant will be moved this month, although the fix will likely take weeks, Egli added.

Don't Stop Believing mixed with Full Clip? Max Zims will make it happen at Babylon's Beat the Clock party on Saturday night.

DJ spins multi-era retro dance bash

BACKSTAGE PASS

Babylon hosts Beat the Clock party at 10 p.m. on Friday

Trevor Greenway
Metro | Ottawa

Max Zims is going to find out just how much of a challenge it can be to seamlessly mix Journey's Don't Stop Believing with Gang Starr's Full Clip.

But the local selector is thirsty for the tall order, as he digs through his digital crates for tunes from the '80s to today's modern beats for Babylon's Beat the Clock party this

Saturday night.

Zims can't wait to drop nostalgic tunes all night on the vociferous crowds waiting to hear "my jam."

"It's the most epic '80s song, in my opinion," laughs Zims, referring to Journey's grand wedding fire-starter.

"We are taking it from the '80s all the way to 2016, so that will be interesting."

Zims will voyage through a decade an hour, dropping familiar and nostalgic jams on the likely diversely-aged dance floor that will act as a sonic time travel chamber for those willing to tap back into their uninhibited youth — and those still living it.

"It works out for the older people who might not want to stay out until 3 a.m.," adds Zims.

"They can just come early and enjoy their '80s portion."

That's the whole point of the Beat the Clock Party — a wistful spree of auricular designs through time, era by era, celebrating the early roots of hip hop and the music it later inspired. It hasn't been hard for Zims to find common themes and links throughout each era, especially as a DJ who grew up idolizing conscious hip hop of the '80s and '90s.

"The '80s have the foundations of hip hop, so you can see toward the end of the '80s, it was N.W.A. and Run-DMC and just seeing the progression of hip hop in general is great," adds Zims.

"But then there is also the alternative rock and pop stuff — '80s were the glory days for that with Michael Jackson, Prince and Madonna — legends. And you see all those influences in the '90s and 2000s like all the boy bands and Britney Spears."

Zims is no stranger to Babylon's DJ theme nights, including Bey Bey and Drake Night parties. But Beat the Clock is a much bigger spectrum, spanning every genre from the '80s all the way to today's hottest jams.

But while each hour can be limiting, Zims says there's also a lot of freedom within eras. The challenge will be mixing between decades and genres without disrupting the vibe.

"It's nice because it's stressful in a way. You have to be on your toes because you can't just play what you want and get lazy with it," he says.

"It's challenging and also fun to revisit that whole era."

Zims is inviting pretty much everyone to this Saturday's retro party — rave kids of the '90s, millennials who can't get enough of JT's poodle perm and anyone who still wears their Golden Eagles varsity letterman jacket from '86.

Music starts at 10 p.m. with tickets at $5 before midnight.

A 'pretty gruesome sight'

DEADLY STREETS

Councillors, bike advocates demand better infrastructure

Emma Jackson and Haley Ritchie
Metro | Ottawa

More than 100 people gathered outside City Hall Thursday for an impromptu rally just hours after a 23-year-old cyclist was killed by a dump truck at the intersection of Laurier Avenue and Lyon Street.

According to witnesses, the driver of a Tomlinson construction truck was turning right onto Lyon around 7:49 a.m. and collided with the east-bound cyclist.

"Paramedics tried to save her, but she was pronounced dead at the scene," said Ottawa Police spokesperson Const. Marc Soucy.

While police have yet to identify the woman, the CBC has reported it's Nusrat Jahan, the daughter of a Bangladeshi diplomat.

Police are seeking witnesses. Andy Poirier said sirens drew him outside to find a "pretty gruesome sight."

Poirier said the woman had been crushed beneath the truck's back wheels.

At the noon rally, Somerset Coun. Catherine McKenney, Kitchissippi Coun. Jeff Leiper and River Coun. Riley Brockington led the crowd in a moment of silence and speeches, which were punctuated by bike bells, cheers of "shame" and "enough is enough."

Leiper suggested ending right turns on Laurier Street or installing separate lights for pedestrians and cyclists could improve safety in the corridor.

According to police data, there were 17 reported collisions along the Laurier segregated bike lane throughout 2014 and 2015. Most were the result of "turning movements," but until now none had been fatal.

This was the first reported collision at Lyon Street during that time. There were four collisions each at Laurier and Bank, Elgin and Kent streets, three at Metcalfe Street, one at O'Connor Street and one mid-block near Percy Street.

Terry Scanlon, who owns a hot dog stand at Bank Street and Laurier, said he's had misgivings about the bike lane's safety since it was installed in 2011. He had wanted mirrors installed at intersections to help right-turning drivers spot cyclists. Scanlon said he sees close calls on the bike lane every day.

"There are so many people that gather at the intersections, they've all got different interests, and that's what happens: death," Scanlon said. "It's going to happen again."

This is the third serious incident involving a driver colliding with a cyclist this week.

A 45-year-old man was sent to hospital in critical condition after he was struck at the corner of Vanier Parkway and Donald St. on Monday. Another man was rushed to hospital after being struck by an SUV driver at Ogilvie and Cyrville on Tuesday.

Fall construction to be 'challenging'

Think the end of summer means the end of construction season? Think again.

Drivers should brace themselves for a "challenging" fall, with many of the summer's construction projects bleeding into the cooler months, city staff said Thursday.

"I'm not going to sugar-coat it, this fall will be challenging on our roadways," said transportation committee chairman Coun. Keith Egli at the annual construction briefing at city hall.

You can blame Canada for that: As Ottawa prepares for the country's year-long 150th birthday celebration in 2017, many road renewal projects have been accelerated in the downtown core. There's $310 million in construction underway on the city's roads, paths and sidewalks this year. While some have already wrapped up — the Byward Market parking garage reopened this summer, for example, along with projects on Albert and Wellington streets — some are just getting started.

O'Connor Street will be a mess this fall as the new north-south bikeway is built. New closures on Metcalfe will cut yet another north-south route short, on top of delays already underway on Kent and Lyon.

+ TROUBLE SPOTS

Where not to drive in fall:

1 O'Connor Street from Laurier to Fifth avenues.

Construction is underway on the first phase of the O'Connor Street bikeway. Drivers should expect 15-minute or longer delays in rush hour.

2 Main Street and McIlraith Bridge.

On the McIlraith Bridge over the Rideau River, drivers and cyclists are reminded to go single file. Everyone should expect 15 minute delays.

3 North or south, anywhere downtown.

Mackenzie, Lyon, Kent, O'Connor, Metcalfe, Elgin, Nicholas, Main. All north-south streets, all affected by construction.

The Nicholas Street exit will continue to be slowed by LRT detours and Main Street's complete street transformation will continue to cause delays of 15 minutes or more.

DISTRACTED DRIVING

Driver in video charged

Lucy Scholey
Metro | Ottawa

Ottawa police have charged a woman after she was caught texting and driving on video.

The woman, who recently moved to Ontario from Newfoundland, has been charged with careless driving, distracted driving and failure to notify change of address.

Ottawa police say there will be no charges laid against motorcyclist Erik Hanna, who filmed the woman texting and driving on Woodroffe Avenue near Algonquin College on Saturday.

Hanna's video — which racked up 1.5 million views on Facebook — shows the woman texting behind the wheel and ignoring Hanna when he taps on her window. Hanna said she failed to advance — twice — when the traffic light changed.

The video shows Hanna pulling ahead of the driver. Then she cuts in front of him, in what looks like a near collision.

Police have closed the investigation.

ENTREPRENEURS

Bells Corners site of smallest craft brewery in Ottawa

THE BOTTLENECK

Jordan Duff

Chris and Jen Samuel are proud owner-operators of Ottawa's smallest craft brewery: Evergreen Craft Ales, named after the street it can be found on. And yes, their most supportive customers are also their neighbours.

Their new brewery operates out of a 200-square-foot garage in a residential area of Bells Corners. Evergreen has received extra help and support from Covered Bridge Brewing and Broken Stick Brewing.

The supportive brewing family extends beyond municipal boundaries, as it was Hammond River Brewing in New Brunswick that trailblazed the path for home-based breweries and demonstrated they could be successful. Hammond River even chatted with Evergreen over the phone to share sage advice. Aren't beer people the best?

While Evergreen doesn't plan on holding the title of smallest brewery indefinitely, being small has advantages. Every customer gets facetime with the owners. This means they are able to collect feedback and evolve. Because they run a small brew system, it's easier to tweak recipes and experiment. Currently, Evergreen rolls on a four-batch system with two flagship beers, a familiar favourite and a one-off experimental brew.

As a beer fan, Chris Samuel is partial to heavily hopped IPAs and Pale Ales. But as a brewer, he wants to go beyond just a handful of styles. Instead, he wants to create flavourful beers that focus on balance and keep the ABV, alcohol by volume, in check.

The brewery also has an exclusive Evergreen Club, using membership fees to help the brewery grow. Members are guaranteed seasonal brews, merchandise and other perks. Harvest ale will be the next seasonal available, using hops grown in the backyard. Very local.

When they do outgrow the garage, the Samuels plan to build something special: "When we do move it will be to create something unique that will add value to the community as a whole." Until then, I'll keep checking MLS listings on Evergreen Drive.

Sept. 8, CRAFT is launching their newest Community Brew: Kichesippi Community Common. $1 from the sale of each Community Brew will go to JDRCF (Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation).

Keeping the pre-Oktoberfest hype going, the #BeausOktoberfest Mix Pack hits the LCBO, the brewery, and their home delivery service this month.

Covered Bridge Brewing is hosting a Taste of Stittsville on Sunday, Sept. 4, from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Nita Beer has new seasonals coming out, including, an English IPA, a maple pumpkin spice ale (Autumn bomb!), and a coffee ale (Red Goat).

The boy who changed a nation

SYRIAN REFUGEE CRISIS

Alan's death had profound impact on Canadians' lives

A year ago, Tima Kurdi was just a suburban mother, a hardworking immigrant in British Columbia who had knocked on many doors in a helpless effort to bring over her siblings and their families from war-torn Syria.

On Sept. 2, 2015, the Port Coquitlam woman's life was forever changed because of the drowning deaths of her nephews, Alan, 3, and Ghalib, 5, and their mother in the Aegean Sea while fleeing to Greece. The tragedy thrust her into a new role: appealing to the Canadian conscience over the long-standing refugee crisis.

Kurdi was thrust into the spotlight, becoming a spokeswoman for millions of Syrian refugees to people in Canada and around the world shaken by the image of tiny Alan lying facedown and lifeless on a Turkish beach.

The plea she and other Syrian Canadians had been making for years to politicians was finally heard. Just weeks later,

Alan, left, and his brother Ghalib Kurdi. Alan, 3, Ghalib, 5, and their mother drowned in the Aegean Sea while fleeing to Greece on Sept. 2, 2015. CONTRIBUTED the new Liberal government swiftly opened Canada's door to thousands of Syrian refugees.

But Kurdi and her family weren't the only people whose lives were changed by little Alan's death: Syrian refugee families have been given the opportunity that Alan didn't have to build a new life in Canada. Members of Muslim and Arab communities who have felt disenfranchised in Canada have a renewed sense of belonging. And ordinary people who rolled up their sleeves to engage in refugee issues feel a fresh pride in being Canadian.

"There has been a profound shift among Canadians in terms of our idea of refugees. For all of us on the ground, we were used to reaching out to religious groups and labour unions for help," said Janet Dench, of the Canadian Council for Refugees. "Now, all organizations suddenly are trying to find ways to offer help for refugees."

The death of Alan Kurdi, a three-year-old boy, truly has impacted lives around the world.

Dench called Alan Kurdi's death a defining moment that shifted Canadians' attitude toward the distant refugee crisis in Europe and the Middle East.

Brian Dyck, chair of the Canadian Refugee Sponsorship Agreement Holder Association, said few people would have expected the refugee crisis to become a campaign issue in last October's federal election.

Then prime minister Stephen Harper was forced to address the Conservative government's record on the refugee crisis, while Immigration Minister Chris Alexander, who eventually lost his seat in the election, suspended campaigning to return to Ottawa to deal with the fallout.

"It's hard to say if it changed the outcome of the election," said Dyck, "but Canada's response to the refugee crisis was certainly discussed a lot for several weeks." TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

PM talks human rights in China

Justin Trudeau set his sights squarely on China's human rights record Thursday, painting Canada as a straight-talking champion of personal freedoms as he lectured an elite business crowd on the value of good governance and free expression.

The prime minister's direct remarks came during week-long official visit to China aimed at forging deeper commercial and cultural bonds between the two countries.

Building closer economic ties will make it easier for China and Canada to speak frankly about governance, human rights and the rule of law, Trudeau told several hundred people at an event hosted by the Canada China Business Council.

"I remind everyone that as a country that has seen first hand the benefits of free expression and good governance — Canada encourages China to do more to promote and protect human rights," he said. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Hispanic leaders 'confused'

U.S. ELECTION

Trump speech misleads many who advised the nominee

"Crushed." "Disappointed." "Confused."

Some Hispanic leaders who have been advising Donald Trump say they feel betrayed after his long-awaited immigration speech that definitively ruled out a pathway to legal status for people living in the country illegally.

Trump stopped short of calling for the mass deportation of millions of people who have not committed crimes beyond their immigration offences. But he also ruled out what he dismissed as "amnesty," saying those who want to live legally in the U.S. will need to leave and head to the back of the line.

"There's several of us who have gone out on a limb, if you will, to try to at least be at the table of reason with him, and that's left us confused and disappointed," said Tony Suarez, the executive vice-president of the National Hispanic Christian Leadership Conference. He's been among those pushing Trump to moderate his stance.

As recently as Monday, he said, the GOP presidential nominee had signalled on a conference call with faith leaders that they could expect to see a gentler, more compassionate Trump in the speech. Trump, Suarez said, was asked explicitly whether they would see a softening or any "hope" for at least some of the people currently living in the shadows.

"He said, 'Yes,' and he thought we would be very pleased on Wednesday," said Suarez. "The impression given on the call was not what we heard last night."

Royal audacity: Did Kate get catcalled?

The Duchess of Cambridge, Kate Middleton, appeared to catch the attention of a group of construction workers on Thursday as she toured Cornwall with her husband.

In photos of the interaction, she appears to laugh at what's being said, while Prince William looks less than impressed. Before jumping to conclusions, the exchange seems to be a lot more innocent than the photos make it look. And no, William isn't reopening the Tower of London. It appears that Sam Wayne, the construction worker in the foreground, just wanted a selfie with the royal couple.

British tabloids are having a field day with the apparent catcalls, calling the construction workers "cheeky" and praising the royal couple for taking it all in jest. METRO

Airline mixes up two five-year-old boys

A woman in New York says she hasn't stopped crying since an airline mistook her five-year-old for another child and flew him to the wrong city.

Maribel Martinez tells New York's Daily News she was shocked when JetBlue staffers presented her with another little boy on Aug. 17 at Kennedy Airport.

"I thought he was kidnapped," said Martinez. "I thought I would never see him again."

Both unaccompanied five-year-old boys had boarded in the Dominican Republic. Martinez said her son was wearing a wristband with his name on it. But the other child was carrying Andy's passport.

The boy who was mistakenly flown to New York was safely returned to Boston, the airline said. JetBlue is reviewing how the mix-up occurred.

Martinez said it took more than three hours for the airline to track down Andy in Boston. When it put her on the phone with him, he said, "Mami, they put me on another plane," she told the newspaper.

Bombardier to suspend jet production

MANUFACTURING

Move due to sluggishness in market, says spokesman

Bombardier is juggling challenges on two new fronts in Canada, temporarily suspending business jet production and falling behind in its delivery of a light rail transit prototype for Toronto's Eglinton Crosstown transit line.

The aerospace and railway manufacturer says it plans to place workers at its Global jet completion centre in Montreal on furlough for an unspecified amount of time next year.

"It's a minor adjustment to our completion activities that will be deployed in 2017," spokesman Mark Masluch said Thursday.

He said the change — which follows last year's move to cut production of the Global 5000 and 6000 models from 80 to about 50 per year — will better manage costs and address ongoing sluggishness in the business jet market.

A company source who spoke on condition of anonymity said Bombardier is seeking to suspend production for 20 days in addition to the usual two-week shutdown during summer.

Bombardier has also been taking action involving its Challenger and Learjets.

Meanwhile, Bombardier Transportation said it will deliver a light rail transit prototype in two to three weeks to Metrolinx, an agency of the Ontario government, for the Eglinton Crosstown transit line in Toronto after missing Wednesday's deadline to do so.

Instagram launches zoom feature at last

Instinctively pinching on an ex's Instagram photo to zoom in and accidentally liking it (oops!) will be less likely now that the app has finally graced users with a zoom feature.

Instagram announced the new functionality on Wednesday, allowing users to pinch-to-zoom in on photos and videos.

The inability to zoom was one of the most complained about aspects of the app.

The company did not provide any explanation as to why this rather basic function was introduced five years later, but did say it's working on "improving core parts of Instagram."

"Over the past six months, you've seen many exciting changes come to Instagram, from a new icon to longer videos and even a new way to share everyday moments with Instagram Stories," Instagram said in a statement posted on its account.

Users took to social media to rejoice at the game-changing feature.

The zoom function, currently available on iOS only, will be available on Android devices in the coming weeks.

HOW TO KEEP PLENTY OF FISH IN THE SEA

Climate change is warming up the oceans, and many fish can't handle the heat. They're fleeing from tropical waters for cooler climes to the north and south. It's affecting fish harvests, especially in poor countries where they're needed most. UBC environmental science professor William Cheung has proposed a bold thought experiment: What if we just ... closed the ocean? Could we save the seas?

Using some fancy math, Cheung and colleagues predicted the abundance of 30 far-roaming fish species by 2050, assuming global temperatures will have increased by about 1.8 C over the 1985-2005 average by 2100. They looked at three ways we could manage the high seas — the international waters that take up 2/3 of the oceans. They measured how those scenarios would affect the remaining 1/3 of the oceans: the exclusive economic zones (EEZs) particular countries have the right to use. They assume no more than the maximum number of fish that can be harvested without depletion — called the maximum sustainable yield — is taken from the EEZs themselves.

Can anybody predict an earthquake?

Scientists were once charged for failing to predict an earthquake. Can anybody predict that? — Dean, Toronto

According to the U.S. Geological Survey, no scientist has "ever predicted a major earthquake. They do not expect to know how in the foreseeable future." But "probabilities can be calculated for potential future earthquakes."

Despite this, after Italy's deadly 2009 quake, six scientists and one government official were convicted of involuntary manslaughter for failing to communicate the risks. It's not clear yet whether there will be a repeat of this blame game in light of the Aug. 24, 2016 quake.

The scientists were later cleared. They'd simply said the chance of a major quake had neither increased nor decreased after a recent cluster (called a "swarm") of tremors.

Here's the thing: In most cases (99 per cent, according to one seismologist), a swarm is not a warning knell for a major quake. However, big quakes are often preceded by smaller "foreshocks" — though it may not be clear what's a foreshock and what's the real thing until after the fact.

Chile, possibly the most earthquake-ready nation, has a network of sensors that detect tremors as they happen, so people can be evacuated if it's determined there's a risk of tsunamis.

Early warning systems in the works — ones that can, for example, trigger trains to stop and power and gas lines to be disabled to minimize damage — are expected to provide a couple of minutes of notice, at the very most. It's not like a weather forecast, and it probably never will be.

Here's the heart of it: Earthquakes, the release of pent-up potential energy inherent in the position of tectonic plates, are chaotic by nature. This brings to mind a favourite quotation of mine, from Irish comedian Dara Ó Briain: "Science knows it doesn't know everything; otherwise, it'd stop."

How M.L. Stedman's debut novel The Light Between Oceans made it to the big screen

Few debut novels have made as big a splash as M.L. Stedman's The Light Between Oceans. Set on a lonely island off the west coast of Australia, the 2012 book tells the tale of lighthouse keepers who find a lost baby and what happens when good people make bad decisions. It's a love story, mystery and tragedy rolled into a sweeping historical novel.

But the story of how the New York Times bestseller came into existence and how it made the transition from the page to the screen has almost as many twists as the book itself.

Originally from Western Australia, Stedman moved to London, England, to work as a lawyer. In 1997, she took up creative writing and had some success with her short stories. Then came The Light Between Oceans. The novel is about moral choices, though it is careful not to judge the actions of its characters. Tom Sherbourne is a First World War vet who seeks sanctuary as the keeper of a white stone lighthouse. On the mainland, he meets the spirited Isabel Graysmark, who searches for a modern idea of freedom with Tom on the island.

In an interview with The Christian Science Monitor, Stedman said the story and its characters emerged from her imagination: "I closed my eyes and could see a lighthouse and a woman... a man appeared, and I sensed he was the light keeper, and it was his story. Then a boat washed up, carrying the body of a dead man. I kept looking and saw there was a baby in it too, so I had to keep writing to see who all these people were and what happened next."

What happened next was that the novel was a hit. It has been published in over 30 languages and praised for its deeply realized protagonists and its exploration of darkness and light. Stedman herself adds a layer of mystery, granting few interviews and offering little personal information.

In 2012, DreamWorks won the rights to the story, and Derek Cianfrance, director of Blue Valentine and The Place Beyond the Pines, was chosen to recreate Stedman's fictional world of Janus Rock. To capture the novel's conflicted characters, Cianfrance cast Michael Fassbender and Alicia Vikander in the roles of Tom and Isabel, and Rachel Weisz as a mysterious mainlander from the past.

Because the geography is so important to the story, the movie was filmed on location on the rugged west coast of Australia. "I wanted to be incredibly faithful to the book," says Cianfrance.

He says Stedman herself paid him the ultimate compliment when she told him that, in his making of the film, she felt understood. "She said, 'Isn't that the point of life, that we, as human beings, are trying to be understood by each other?'"

The Light Between Oceans is now playing in theatres across Canada.

Fall into film

After a bruising three months, it's about to get better at the multiplex. Here are six movies, performances and story lines moviegoers can look forward to this autumn. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

1 Potter world roars back to life — This fall, J.K. Rowling's $7.8-billion film franchise is back. It's a two-pronged attack. While Fantastic Beasts and Where to Find Them (pictured) is reaching back into the past of Rowling's Potter world, the two-part West End play Harry Potter and the Cursed Child (only co-written by Rowling) is going into the future. It moves the tale 19 years ahead of where the books left off.

2 Ang Lee, innovator — Ang Lee is continually pushing cinema to new technological heights, and his adaptation of Billy Lynn's Long Halftime Walk (Nov. 11) is no less ambitious. The first screening will be in 4K, 3D and 120 frames per second — essentially, hyper reality.

3 Lonergan-Mania — Little is settled about this fall's coming awards season except for this: Kenneth Lonergan's Manchester by the Sea (Nov. 18) is one of the best films of the year. Already celebrated at its Sundance premiere, Casey Affleck excels as a small-town New Englander haunted by tragedy.

4 A more diverse Oscars — After two straight years of "OscarsSoWhite" blanketing a dishearteningly homogenous Academy Awards, a richly diverse array of possible nominees is lining up for this season. A revamped Academy of Motion Pictures may be hard pressed to ignore the likes of Hidden Figures (Dec. 25).

5 A legitimately good Shia LaBeouf — Performance-art theatrics have overshadowed the transformation Shia LaBeouf has undergone. He's made it easy to not take him seriously in recent years, and maybe that's been the point. But in Andrea Arnold's Midwest teenage odyssey, American Honey (Sept. 30), LaBeouf and breakout star Sasha Lane (pictured) are exceptional.

6 Emma Stone gets a proper showcase — How do you come off of a dud like Aloha? By singing, dancing and romancing your way back into America's hearts in what could be a career-defining performance in Damien Chazelle's musical story La La Land (Dec. 16) of course.

In the psychological thriller The 9th Life of Louis Drax, Aaron Paul plays the father of a boy in a coma.

TAYLOR JEWELL/INVISION/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SNEAK PREVIEW

Off-kilter role falls in Paul's wheelhouse

Aaron Paul isn't a dad, yet, but he loves playing one — however flawed that dad might be.

"I love working with kids. I have lots of nieces and nephews. I can't wait to have children of my own," he said during a recent round of interviews for The 9th Life of Louis Drax.

Paul plays two parts — sort of — in Louis Drax, and one came with a monster suit.

"It was a huge process, a four-hour process," he said of his transformation from ex-boxer, violent dad-with-a-drinking problem Peter Drax, to a dark, cave-dwelling thing.

"It was a big suit that I put on. A latex head. I kind of suppressed the memory. It was a nightmare of an experience. But I actually really enjoyed it."

The psychological thriller stars Jamie Dornan as a coma specialist tasked with taking care of a nine-year-old, seemingly accident-prone boy named Louis whom Dornan's Dr. Allan Pascal mind melds with. There's also some romance, on Dornan's part, with Louis' mom.

The story is right in Paul's off-kilter wheelhouse, a la his award-winning role as Jesse Pinkman in Breaking Bad. It's a more challenging stretch for Dornan, of Fifty Shades fame, despite being the son of a doctor who once had acting aspirations of his own.

"My dad is a doctor. My mother was a nurse. My stepmother is a doctor. My uncle's a doctor. It's funny, my dad tried to give me advice for pretty much every character I've played, except on this occasion when I was playing a medical professional," Dornan laughed.

Dornan, who has two young daughters, enjoyed working with a child actor as much as Paul. Louis is played by Aiden Longworth, who was 10 during filming and is now nearly 12.

Yes, Louis is in a coma, though he has more to do than just lie still.

"Aiden, he's brilliant," Dornan said. "You know the famous thing, never work with kids and animals? One of the early scenes I did was with a hamster and a child, so there's two in one. He talks non-stop, so actually the coma aspect, for him, was very, very difficult." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Dear Amy, it's time to meet Oscar

ACADEMY AWARDS

Five noms, no statues: Time for versatile actress to win

Shinan Govani

For Torstar News Service

Better to have been nominated and lost than to have never been nominated at all.

Or is it?

As Amy Adams — alliterative of name, fiery of mane — moseys into Toronto next week this is a question that might be asked. Starring in two, high-profile movies at the Toronto International Film Festival, and with the chatter of awards season commencing anew, it's as good a time as any to be reminded that the 42-year-old sweetheart is in quite the Oscar club: She's five for five, both for Oscar nods and Oscar robs.

Adams is more conspicuous than, say, Julianne Moore, who'd been nominated four times before she won her first statuette for Still Alice. But a solid 12 years passed between Moore's Academy Award win and her

If You Can. That was followed by another drought before the Oscar train began to chug in 2006, with a career-launching part in Junebug. Armed with indie cred and an Oscar nomination she walked down that crimson carpet again in 2009, 2011, 2013 and 2014 for Doubt, The Master, The Fighter and American Hustle, respectively.

No sooner had Leonardo DiCaprio fulfilled his own destiny with a Best Actor win this past February than the Oscar-curse talk shifted to the woman who's been a high school gymnast, a Gap greeter and an A-grade cartoon Disney princess, and who has shared movie credits with Meryl Streep twice (in Doubt and Julie & Julia).

"Now that Leo got his Oscar, can we finally move on to the injustice that is Amy Adams being nominated five times without winning, how?" tweeted @NathanWarnock, one voice in the rising chorus.

Oscar-land often favours ingenues (remember when Juliette Binoche squashed Lauren Bacall's forever-hopes of a statuette when the two faced off in the '90s?), and it becomes a harder climb for Ms. Enchanted to make to avoid being a permanent also-ran. She could previous nomination, while Adams's five nominations came in the span of a decade.

"The nominations got Amy attention, and better work with more interesting directors, but it happening in such quick succession ... it's also kind of a bag of rocks on her back," an L.A.-based Oscar-watching veteran told me recently. That is to say, in Hollyweird, stars such as Brie Larson and Alicia Vikander walked away with statuettes this year on their first go-round, while a dash of Susan Lucci (the soap opera star nominated for an Emmy 19 times before she won the award), clogs Adams' filmography.

The all-American actress paid her dues in straight-to-video marvels like Cruel Intentions 2 and got a break in 2002 when she was cast as the candy striper in Steven Spielberg's Catch Me go the route of Susan Sarandon, who won at 49, with her fifth nomination) or take the more treacherous path of Glenn Close (six nominations, zero wins).

Adams's two films screening in Toronto offer a glimmer of hope. She stars in Tom Ford's Nocturnal Animals, a screwy character sketch, and Denis Villeneuve's Arrival, which some people are already calling the sci-fi thriller of the year.

If nothing else, the two projects demonstrate Adams's range; she has more range than most, but it's also prevented her from developing the kind of image that's critical in today's star-making apparatus.

"In her short career," wrote Nico Lang in dailydot.com, "there's almost nothing Amy Adams hasn't done ... but for being everywhere, she's seemingly nowhere."

Why the whole world is in love with Alicia Vikander

IN FOCUS

Actress has quickly become the 'it' girl of film

Richard Crouse
For Metro Canada

In The Light Between Oceans, Michael Fassbender plays a stoic World War I veteran who falls truly, madly and deeply in love with Isabel (Alicia Vikander).

It's not an uncommon tale these days. It seems all of Hollywood adores the 27-year-old Swedish actress.

The New York Times praises "the gamin bone structure, that sullen pout, those velvety fawn eyes," and producer Lionel Wigram declared, "She's a star. You can't take your eyes off her on screen or in person."

Her talent and versatility have made her so in demand it's hard to believe that in her late teens drama school twice rejected her.

According to her those dismissals were a blessing in disguise as they allowed her earlier access to "an industry that prizes youth in women."

This weekend she takes on the romance of The Light Between Oceans as a precocious woman who asks a man she has just met to marry her. Based on an acclaimed and bestselling book by M.L. Stedman, it's a story about choices, honour and true love that plays like a highbrow Nicolas Sparks story in period clothes. It also showcases Vikander's range. In the last two years she has played everything from the personification of artificial intelligence to the estranged daughter of Hitler's favourite rocket scientist.

After success in Swedish language film and television, Vikander made an impression in under-seen films like the lushly beautiful Anna Karenina opposite Keira Knightley and Testament of Youth, a World War I era story of one woman's voyage into pacifism.

It was Ex Machina, however, that made her a star. She played an automaton named Ava created by tech wiz Nathan "The Mozart of Code" Bateman (Oscar Isaac). Programmer Caleb Smith (Domhnall Gleeson) is hired to evaluate if the robot's ability is equal to, or undifferentiated from, that of a human being. Ex Machina is presented as sci-fi, but it really is a human drama; a human drama where the main character has a fibre optic nervous system. Vikander is equal parts warmth and chilly precision as a robot who wants more than to be a machine.

Next Guy Ritchie cast her in The Man from U.N.C.L.E. and if he had Frankenstein'd an actress for the role of Gaby in the mould of 1960s starlets, he could not have topped Vikander as a picture-perfect representation of mid-century cool. She looks like she was born to wear the oversized sunglasses and Mary Quant frocks but she's more than just the romantic interest.

In The Danish Girl, Eddie Redmayne plays the title role, transgender pioneer Lili Elbe, and while he has the showier part, it is Vikander — as Elbe's ex-wife — who won a best supporting Oscar for holding the screen as the film's emotional core.

But perhaps the biggest indication of her industry clout is that she recently announced she'll be stepping in for Angelina Jolie as Lara Croft in the rebooted Tomb Raider series.

Determining Price's status for World Cup

HOCKEY
Thought is 'he'll be ready to go' after exhibition tilts

Mike Babcock had just three days to prepare his team for its first game at the 2014 Sochi Olympics. Team Canada's head coach won't be so pressed for time ahead of the World Cup of Hockey.

Training camp begins in Ottawa on Monday with the tournament starting almost two weeks later in Toronto on Sept. 17. That leaves plenty of opportunity for Babcock and his staff to evaluate starting goalie Carey Price, rejig a defence that will be without injured veteran Duncan Keith and craft line combinations from a wealth of talent.

"We're excited about the mix of our group and I know as a management staff and coaching staff we're excited to get to Ottawa and get up and running and I'm sure the players share that same excitement," Canada general manager Doug Armstrong said in an interview.

Price, the 2015 Vezina Trophy winner, is among the biggest question marks heading into camp. While the 29-year-old is said to be at full strength following a knee injury that caused him to miss most of last season, it's not known how s h a r p he'll be after nearly 10 months without game action. How quickly can he regain top form? And how long can Babcock and the Canadians wait to make that determination in a two-week tournament?

"Certainly, we understand he hasn't played in a competitive game for a long time," Armstrong said. "But a lot of guys obviously, if you missed the playoffs or didn't go to the (world championships), you've been off four or five months, too. He's going to get in there in training camp and face lots of shots. We'll get him in some game action as soon as possible and just try and get him up and running before Game 1."

"I think that after the exhibition games he'll be ready to go." Canada plays three exhibition games. Just how much game action the B.C. native gets and needs after such a long lay-off is uncertain. Canada also must ensure that its alternatives, Corey

Doug Armstrong

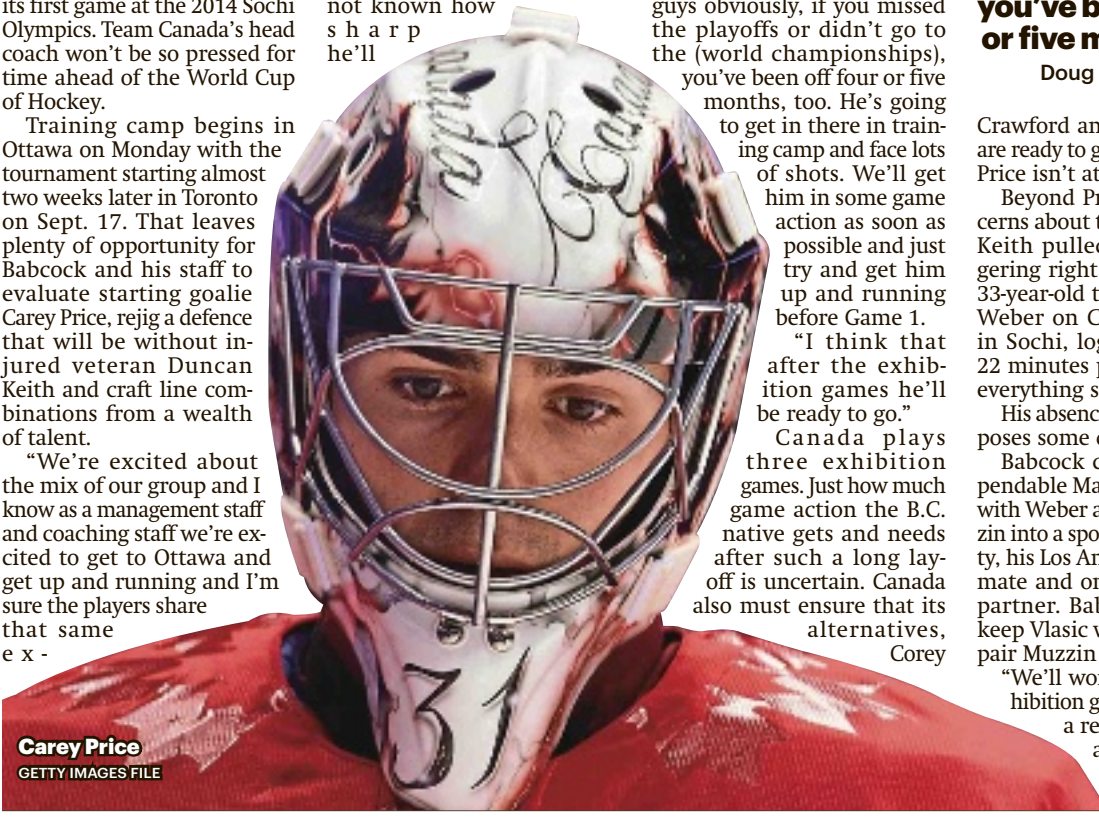

Crawford and Braden Holtby, are ready to go in the event that Price isn't at his best.

Beyond Price are new concerns about the back end after Keith pulled out with a lingering right knee injury. The 33-year-old teamed with Shea Weber on Canada's top pair in Sochi, logging more than 22 minutes per game as a do-everything sort for Babcock.

His absence is significant and poses some difficult choices.

Babcock could slot the dependable Marc-Edouard Vlasic with Weber and shift Jake Muzzin into a spot alongside Doughty, his Los Angeles Kings teammate and one-time defensive partner. Babcock could also keep Vlasic with Doughty and pair Muzzin with Weber.

"We'll work it all out as exhibition goes on," he said on a recent Hockey Canada conference call.

U.S. OPEN Murray chases down win under new roof

Wimbledon champ Andy Murray advanced to the third round at the U.S. Open with another straight-sets victory.

The second-seeded Murray beat Marcel Granollers 6-4, 6-1, 6-4 on Thursday under the roof at Arthur Ashe Stadium in New York with play suspended on the outer courts. The heavy rain outside made quite a clatter on the new roof, and Murray said in his on-court interview that it was tough at first because it was hard to hear the ball.

Murray jumped to a quick 5-2 lead in the first set, then it took about 23 minutes to get through the last two games as Granollers saved six set points and got back on serve. But Murray earned another break to finally clinch the set after 67 minutes, then cruised through the final two in 75 minutes combined.

Following the rain delay, sixth-seeded Kei Nishikori beat 20-year-old qualifier Karen Khachanov 6-4, 4-6, 6-4, 6-3.

In the women's draw, Venus Williams breezed through her second-round match, beating German veteran Julia Goerges 6-2, 6-3. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RECIPE Ham and Cheese Muffins

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh
For Metro Canada

These muffins are a portable, filling and yummy snack. Happy trails!

Cook time: 25 minutes
Makes one dozen muffins

Ingredients

- 1/2 cup ham, chopped
- 1 cup cheddar, grated
- 1/2 cup green onions, finely sliced
- 2 cups flour
- 1 cup whole wheat flour
- 4 tsp baking powder
- 1 tsp salt
- a few good grinds of black pepper
- 1 cup milk
- 1/2 cup vegetable oil
- 1/2 cup plain Greek yogurt
- 2 eggs

Directions

1. Preheat the oven to 375 degrees. Prepare muffin tins or line with paper muffin cups.

2. In a large bowl, mix together the flour, whole wheat flour, salt and pepper and baking powder. Add the ham, cheese and green onions and toss until they are covered in the flour mixture and distributed evenly throughout it.

3. In another bowl, whisk together the milk, oil, yogurt and the eggs. Pour the wet mixture over the dry and stir until everything is completely combined — but don't over mix or your muffins will be tough.

3. Spoon the batter evenly into the muffin tins or muffin papers. Place your trays in the hot oven and bake for 20 to 25 minutes, until they are golden brown and a toothpick inserted into a muffin comes out clean.
